L. 2022 1ST QUARTER REVIEW

Raw material and commodity prices, which had risen excessively due to the uncertainties caused by the Covid 19 epidemic in global trade, entered a downward trend as of the beginning of 2022. The Russia-Ukraine war caused prices, especially agricultural products and fertilizers, to rise again.

About 30% in world wheat, barley and sunflower trade; The continuation of the war between these two countries, which have an important place in the corn trade with a share of approximately 20%, played a decisive role in the agricultural product markets all over the world, especially in our country.

In addition, considering that Russia and Belarus are important suppliers of chemical fertilizers, raw materials and commodities in international markets, the risk of availability especially in nitrogen and potassium fertilizers and the record high prices can be expressed as other negativities.

Despite the increase in fertilizer, energy and transportation prices in our country due to international developments, price increases in important agricultural products such as wheat, barley, corn and sunflower will contribute positively to the incomes of local producers. Also generally good during the winter months; It is expected that the grain yield in 2022 will be better than last year, after the weak rainfall in April has recently reached seasonal normals again. It is predicted that this situation will also have a positive impact on the chemical fertilizer consumption of the farmers, who mainly postponed their purchases in the first quarter.

In this context, it is predicted that 20.5 million tons of wheat will be produced on a 7.1 million hectare plantation area in 2022, which has a critical importance for our country. This amount means that there will be a 2.6% increase in wheat production compared to the long-term average and a serious increase of 20.6% compared to the previous year.

Raw material and commodity prices, which had risen excessively due to the uncertainties caused by the Covid 19 epidemic in global trade, had entered a downward trend as of the beginning of 2022. However, the Russia-Ukraine war that started as of the end of February caused prices to rise again, especially in agricultural products and fertilizers.

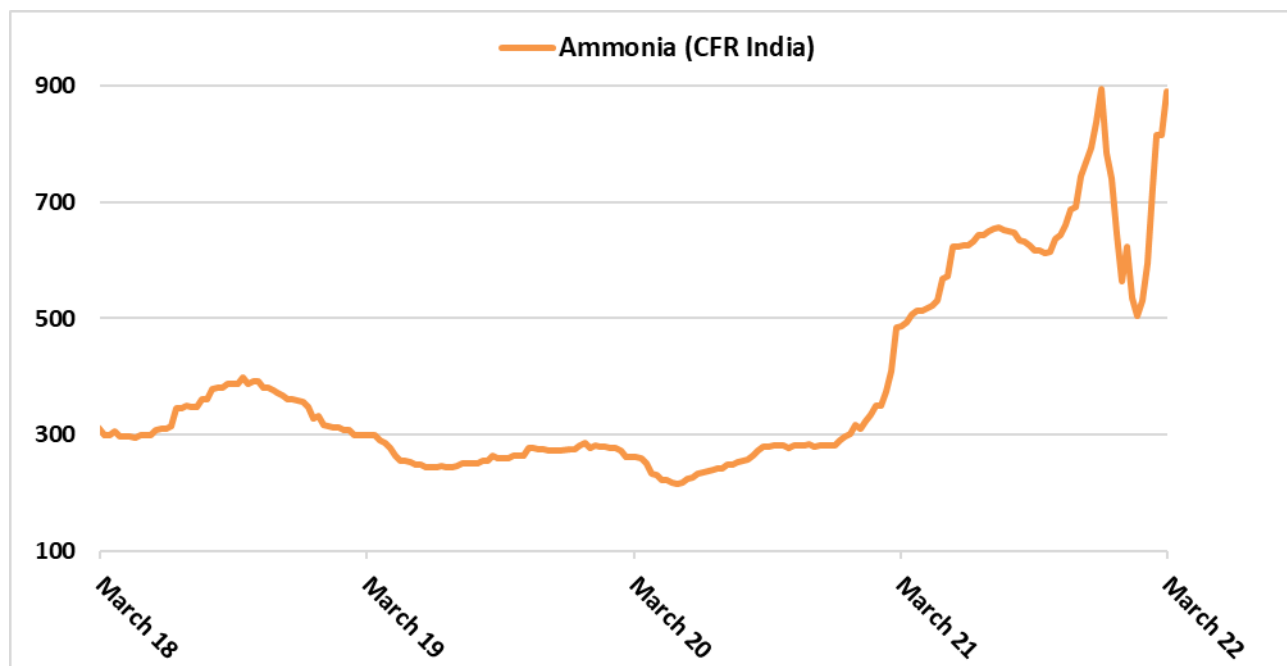

About 30% in world wheat, barley and sunflower trade; The continuation of the war between these two countries, which have an important place in the corn trade with a share reaching approximately 20%, played a decisive role in the agricultural product markets all over the world, especially in our country.

Price increases in agricultural products will contribute positively to the incomes of local producers. On the other hand, fertilizer, energy and transportation prices, which have increased with the effect of the war, put pressure on their incomes, and this situation has a negative impact on input consumption.

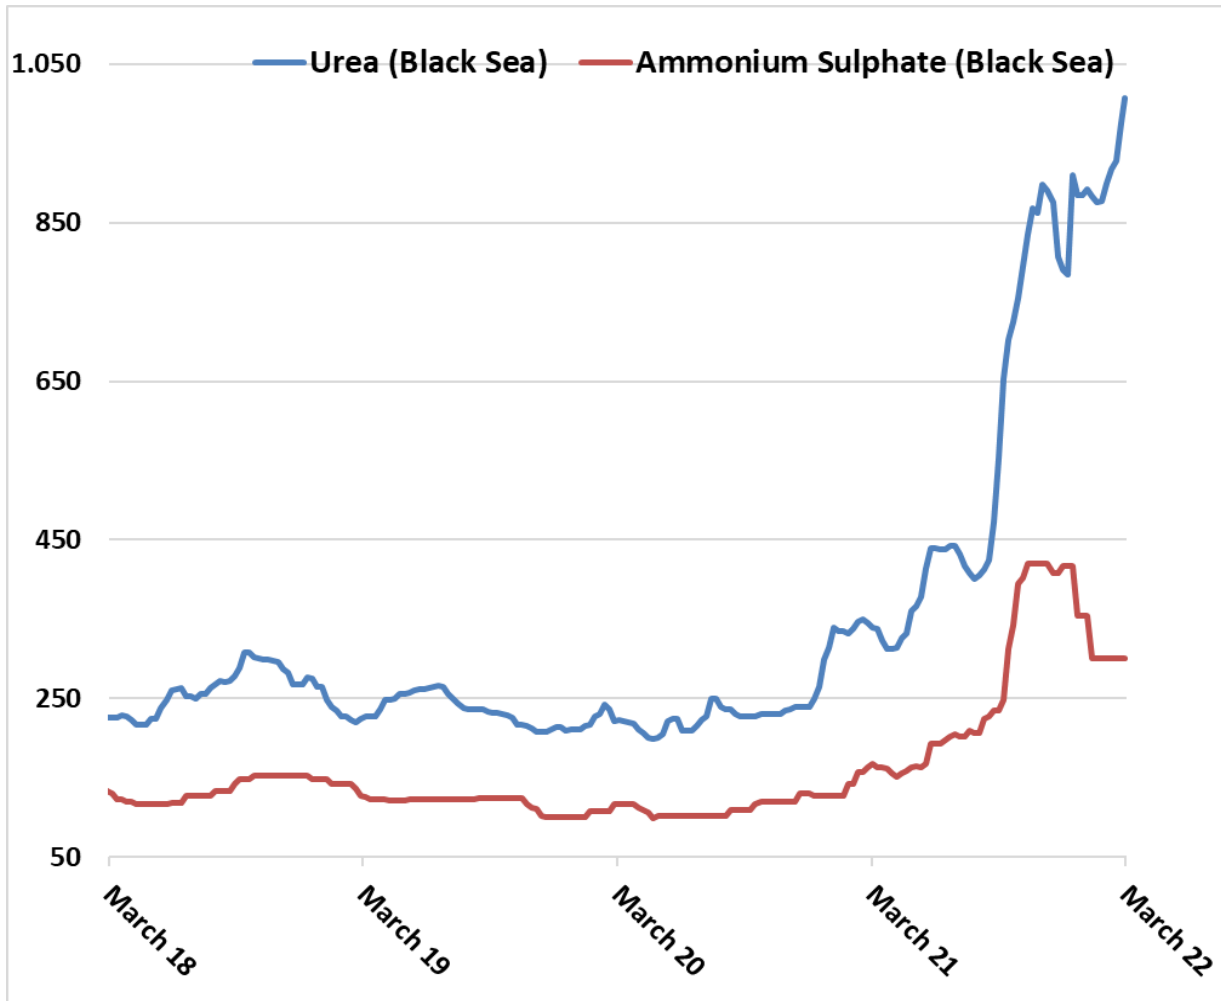

Considering that Russia and Belarus are important suppliers of chemical fertilizers, raw materials and commodities in the world, the risk of availability especially in nitrogen and potassium fertilizers and the record high prices can be expressed as other negativities.
